

Russia Seeks to Revive Coronavirus-Hit Tourism Industry By Cutting Visa Red Tape

April 24, 2020

Rostourism warns that the government's measures to close its borders and suspend visa issuing will lead to “colossal losses for the economy” of at least 300 billion rubles ($4 billion) per quarter.

Aleksander Avilov / Moskva News Agency

Russia’s Federal Tourist Agency (Rostourism) wants to help the industry recover from the coronavirus crisis by relaxing visa rules after the country reopens its borders, the RBC news website reported Friday.

Russia grounded international flights, except those that return its nationals from abroad; closed border crossings; and suspended issuing visas and e-visas last month as the country began to see a surge in Covid-19 cases. Rostourism warns that the measures will lead to “colossal losses for the economy” of at least 300 billion rubles ($4 billion) per quarter.

Related article: Foreigners in Russia Can Extend Visas Without Leaving Amid Coronavirus

Lockdown

Russia should introduce multiple-entry tourist visas valid for up to five years in order to offset these losses, according to Rostourism's recommendations cited by RBC. Current rules only allow single- and double-entry visas valid for up to 30 days for tourists.

Rostourism also seeks to cut visa processing time down to three business days. Current tourist visa holders who were unable to travel to Russia due to coronavirus-related restrictions should be able to re-apply for new visas free of charge, according to Rostourism's reported recommendations.

Additionally, the agency wants to extend proposed e-visas, which are due to take effect on Jan. 1, 2021, from 16 days to 90-120 days and make them multiple-entry.

Rostourism confirmed to RBC that it's involved in talks over "a large block of questions on visa simplification" with the Foreign Ministry and other agencies. It was not immediately clear whether the Foreign Ministry, which was drafting its own legislation to ease tourist visa rules before the outbreak hit, would adopt Rostourism's recommendations.

The measures could not only help restore but also increase inbound tourism by up to 30% compared to pre-crisis levels in 2021, Rostourism's chief Zarina Doguzova was cited as saying. Tourists around the world have frequently cited difficulties with obtaining visas as a barrier to visiting Russia.

Russia has adopted a series of emergency measures easing its restrictive immigration laws during the coronavirus outbreak. It automatically extended visas and banned authorities from deporting foreigners if their immigration documents expired between March 15 and June 15.

After Russia reopens its national borders, authorities plan to track foreign tourists' movements through smartphone geolocation for coronavirus prevention, the Kommersant business daily reported earlier in April.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2020/04/24/russia-seeks-to-revive-coronavirus-hit-tourism-industry-by-cutting-visa-red-tape-a70097>